The injury from the workplace and making claims for the injury is often physically and emotionally hard. This is because the hurt person should likewise persevere an injury claim while also suffering from the injury.

Under the workers insurance system, staff are given guaranteed compensation for accepted claims in exchange for giving up their right to take legal action against work-related injuries. The employer finances the program through premiums. This is of benefit to the employer, who is given protection from lawsuits under this system of collective liability. Injured staff together with their loved ones receive fair compensation, whilst expenses are spread among employers.

Workers could however, take legal action against staff in some circumstances. Employees may sue employees that are industry exempt from the workers insurance program. Staff may sue fellow workers if they were "outside the course of their employment" when the injury occurred. A worker could be entitled to benefits under the insurance plan with respect to a disease or an injury, and may also be entitled to file a suit against an individual in respect of the injury; like for instance, an individual driving in the course of their employment could file a suit against the driver of the vehicle which injured them.
